

Leibniz Institute of European History (IEG): Research Fellowship Programme

Overview

Programme Description

The Leibniz Institute of European History (IEG) awards research fellowships to junior scientists in the subjects of European history, history of religion and historical theology or any other historical disciplines.

The Institute supports research projects on European history from the early modern period until 1989/90. The fellowship primarily finances projects

- adopting a comparative or transnational approach,
- on European history with regard to its international connectedness or
- on intellectual, religious or theological history.

The IEG Fellowship provides junior scientists with the opportunity to pursue their individual research project, while living and working for a period of six to 12 months at the Institute. Every year around 20 fellowships are awarded. The monthly stipend amounts to EUR 1,350 for doctoral candidates and to EUR 1,800 for post-doctoral researchers. In addition, a family allowance will be paid, if necessary.
