Description/content	The international Master's programme for "Intercultural Communication and European Studies" (ICEUS) focuses on relevant aspects of intercultural communication and European studies. More than half of the students are international graduates. Study groups are composed of about 15 different nationalities. Hence, the degree programme provides excellent opportunities for intercultural studying and networking.

Being an interdisciplinary programme, ICEUS encompasses classes in social sciences, political sciences, law and communication and focuses on the subject areas of intercultural communication, European studies plus international organisations and global governance.

The programme prepares for careers in international and European organisations, companies and institutions with strong international ties and for employment in public authorities, media or educational institutions.

Course Details

Course organisation

The programme is research-oriented, but much emphasis is also put on the application of practical skills in areas such as intercultural training, languages, modern technology, presentation, individual study, teamwork, etc.

In most classes, the ICEUS students study together in one group, which allows them to gain an intense intercultural experience. In addition, various classes are offered which bring them together with other students.

Field trips to Brussels and Strasbourg are part of the programme and take place every year. These field trips include visits to relevant European institutions.

After the first two semesters, students undertake a compulsory internship of ten weeks outside their home country. The third semester is reserved for in-depth studies and reflection upon the internship experience. The Master's thesis is written during the fourth semester; in this period, students are not required to be present in Fulda.

There are 10 course modules that must be completed to finish the programme successfully:

- Intercultural Communication: Communication, Culture, Media
- European Studies: History and Present of Development in European Societies
- Intercultural Communication: Fields of Action
- Globalisation and International Organisations
- European Studies: European Policy Fields
- Social Sciences Methodology
- Internship, Study and Career Orientation, Reflection
- Advanced Studies in Intercultural Communication and European Studies
- Cross Studies
- Exam Seminar and Colloquium
- Master's Thesis

A module overview and more detailed information on all subjects are available on the programme's website.

A special pre-study programme is offered for ICEUS applicants. This programme provides advanced preparation for students from abroad who want to "warm up" for their future studies in Fulda.

More information on pre-study options can be found on the Pre-Study website.

ICEUS students with a strong interest in research can apply for a PhD programme at Hochschule Fulda after graduation. For more information, see:

EU institutions, EU policy, digitalisation and intercultural communication – the ICEUS MA programme in Fulda provides a comprehensive scientific understanding and a broad knowledge of EU integration policy, especially after fascinating trips to Strasbourg and Brussels. With this background and German and English as the languages of instruction, students will have broad career opportunities. After the mandatory internship, these perspectives will become much clearer.
