Description/content	The Animation and Game Direction Master's degree programme offers students advanced theoretical and practical knowledge as well as methodological competencies in order to develop directorial authorship based on intense genre knowledge and critique, mastery of industrial standard producing practices and strong leadership skills. Students are enabled to develop compelling, innovative content as well as carry out original research in the field of animations, games and immersive experiences. Through project-based learning strategies, the curriculum integrates a variety of relevant subjects, such as advanced animation and game theory, dramaturgy and storytelling, acting and directing, mise-en-scène for animation, game and VR experiences, art direction and IP development. Students are encouraged to define and communicate a directorial vision through subjects like creative producing, production management and leadership. They gain practical experience by directing animation, game and virtual reality projects in the Animation and Game Bachelor's degree programme under the supervision of lecturers.

The Animation and Game Direction Master of Arts programme is taught in English. It combines a high academic standard with a strong practical orientation. It is carried out by an interdisciplinary team of experienced researchers and industry practitioners.

The curriculum is intended for full-time studies. Two programme versions are available: a three-semester version and a four-semester version. Applicants with a seven-semester / 210 ECTS Bachelor's degree or German Diploma are qualified for the three-semester programme version, but they may also apply for the four-semester programme version if they prefer.

Applicants holding a six-semester / 180 ECTS Bachelor's degree can only enrol in the four-semester programme version. It includes an internship semester or, as an alternative, a study abroad semester.
